

The Seed

by Danielle Patricia

It was a Summers day, the Sun had just set and the Moon had begun to appear. It was bright like the headlights of a car on a dark stormy night; it emanated a rich white shade, you could see the unique indents that have been imprinted. It would leave you wondering what's beyond this big blue dot that we wake up and fall asleep on. There is more to life: that was a mantra that would ring through my mind and within my heart. We are just a small aspect of the infinite vastness of the universe. Yet, each of us is extremely important and holds the key to transforming ourselves, and the world, though not all have realized this truth.

That was a driving force to be what I will to be, to do better for myself, to others, and to every living being every time I got the chance. And when a chance didn't seem to be apparent, I would create it, for I am a creator. There are things that we cannot see with the physical eye yet it exists, within and without us, we breathe in this force, we are swimming in its essence daily. Not everything is taught in a classroom, for not everyone is aware. Not everyone wants you to see what there is beyond what's being shown; that doesn't mean it doesn't exist. Doesn't that make you wonder? We're living in a magical and wondrous place. We are aware and able to make decisions. We can think, feel, and move our body. We dream and can even learn from our subconscious mind while we're resting at night. If we allow feeling what needs to be felt and change what it means to us, we can learn so much while sleeping and awake. It can feel scary, though fear is not something to be afraid of; see it as a teacher. You have many teachers surrounding you, once we open our eyes to see what surrounds us in the waking and dreaming realm. We can heal, we can expand, we can help ourselves, and help others. We are endorsed in infinity possibilities throughout this holographic universe.

That was a dip into my mindscape. I no longer was looking for an escape, I was diving into the senses that I was gifted by the divine matrix. Instead of trying to erase past mistakes, I embraced them; changed what it meant to me and found power from the experiences I've had and it drove me towards my dreams, My aspirations kept alerting me through patterns that would appear outside in waking reality, in the dream realm. A light that kept flickering in my heart, even when I felt at times it seemed dark, it was a start. Like the ignition in a car... what was once subconscious, was now conscious; uplifted from within my heart. We call that our second brain because it holds more electricity than the actual brain and is 100,000 times stronger and magnetically 5,000 times stronger than the tissue that sits in our skull. So wouldn't it be something great to be able to not only listen to your brain, but your heart? And we cannot forget the stomach, which is another brain to the body. So listen to your gut instinct as well; find a balance for the 3 brains of your body and you'll never be lead astray.

Continue to plant the seeds of love, for love is not just a relationship with another being... Love is what connects you to everything. Love is the driving force of this beautiful existence we reside in. You are infinite, you are a consciousness living inside of the vessel we call a body, that which is just a temporary home, so treat yourself with love and care and then you can treat the world for your cup will be overflowing with endless amounts of love to distribute.

You are a light that shines, onto the darkened streets when you cannot seem to see; turn on your inner light and you'll be guided, you are energy and energy cannot be destroyed. You see, it can only be converted, like an alchemist; so do not fear death for death is a beginning of something new, like the changing of the seasons. Just plant the seed.
